PORTFOLIO COMMENTARY

- Against the US technology-led market sell-off in January the portfolio held up relatively well. The resilience was due to our overweight position in a strong Energy sector (23%) and a more neutral position in the Material sector (22.9%). The number of stocks that advanced was 41 versus 39 that declined.
- Integrated Energy and Energy Producers were the two best segments in January followed by Supply Chain names - mainly Food Value related and Telecom Services while Digital Infrastructure, Utilities and Equipment & Services performed poorly.
- Not surprisingly, Energy-segment stocks accounted for 4 out of top 5 performers while Utilities, Equipment & Services and Digital Infrastructure were 4 of the 5 worst performers.
- We realised profits in the Energy Producers segment (Devon, Marathon Oil and ConocoPhillips in the USA and Lundin Energy in Sweden), Materials-Chemical (DSM Netherland, Shin-Etsu Japan and PTT Global Chem Thailand).
- Segments in which we increased exposure included Energy-Refiners & Marketing (Marathon Pet and Valero in the US) Energy Infrastructure (Enterprise Products US), Materials - Metals-Aluminium (Norsk Hydro Norway, Hongqiao China), Lithium – (SQM Chile) and Fertiliser (Mosaic US). We also bought in Sweden Telia (Communication) and BCPG Thailand (Utilities-Renewables).

PORTFOLIO POSITIONING

- The current earning season has produced a very mixed bag of results highlighting many of the challenges we discussed previously. In particular, cost inflation, supply chain disruption and chips shortages which are impacting many industries globally.
- We continue to like the Energy Transition and Food Security megatrends as companies in these segments are better- positioned given these challenges.
- In Energy, we view Integrated Energy as the core exposure and preferred overweight with companies in both midstream/infrastructure (pipelines/terminal) and downstream(refining/marketing) are now benefitting from demand recovery while upstream is gaining from tighter supply resulting in firmer oil prices. All should see improved margins and the sector should be delivering good dividend income streams in the coming year and beyond.
- In Materials, we believe two segments are beneficiaries in the current climate -petrochemicals and fertilisers.

- Both Supply Chain (related to Food) and many Utilities involved in renewable energy megatrends (solar, wind, ethanol etc) we believe should be winners as well.
- We are likely to increase exposure in Communication - Telecom Services that provide both defensive characteristics and attractive dividends. However, cost inflation may adversely impact the Industrial and Material sectors, especially those richly valued but previously seen as both defensive and stable.
- We still selectively like the Digital Infrastructure and Transport areas although there are headwinds ahead.
- While the regional allocation results from our bottom-up driven process, we believe the Asia Pacific region, after a year of underperformance, is due for a re-rating this year. We are especially positive in the under-appreciated ASEAN region. Latin America is looking more attractive as well.
